NEWS RELEASE

Margaret J. Taylor Participates in CSRA in Scrubs

Augusta, Georgia . . . February 24, 2010 . . . The Medical College of Georgia (MCG) hosted its 6th “CSRA in Scrubs” event on February 18, 2010 and invited 24 professionals in the CSRA to participate in this one of kind healthcare learning experience.

Margaret Taylor, Business Development Coordinator of CSRA Credit Union, was given the opportunity to spend a day in scrubs and experience what it is like to be a MCG healthcare professional. Margaret had a unique experience and was given a behind the scenes tour as a “CSRA in Scrubs” participant.

Margaret's day began with a "Morning Report" that included "Cut On the Dotted Line" which offered the opportunity to participate in simulated surgery that gave a real "hands on" experience with a not-so-real patient. She was later shown on the local NBC evening news practicing her newly learned skill. Next she spent time with the employees who maintain facilities and equipment for a business that never takes a holiday.

To learn more about the tough questions and tough decisions that must be made on a regular basis, Margaret followed true life patient and family situations through some difficult end-of-life decisions and met the team of professionals who help them through the process. She also met with some Patient Family Advisors (volunteers) who help MCGHealth plan everything from patient menus to facilities.

Moving into the "Afternoon Rounds" Margaret got to the "Heart of the Matter" and toured the Cardiac Cath Lab where she met with the staff who talked about and demonstrated on video some of the latest advancements available in the own community.

At the conclusion of the day, Margaret walked away from the awesome experience much more appreciative of the knowledge and dedication of healthcare providers.
